

Assignment 3 Responsive Web Design

BUILDGROUP residential website

Jomart Akylbek | Group IT2507

One page combines a custom responsive advantages section with Bootstrap layouts.
The original project supplies the subject, photographs and links to the contact page.

Custom stylesheet: AKYL-GROUP/assignment3/style.css

Repository: <https://github.com/akylzhomart699-spec/AKYL-GROUP>

Bootstrap 5.3.8 CSS is loaded from the CDN before the custom stylesheet.

The JavaScript bundle is loaded before the closing body tag.

The viewport meta tag allows responsive rules to use the device width.

The page contains a hero, advantages, project cards, FAQ and contact section.

The following tasks explain the implementation and show the tested layouts.

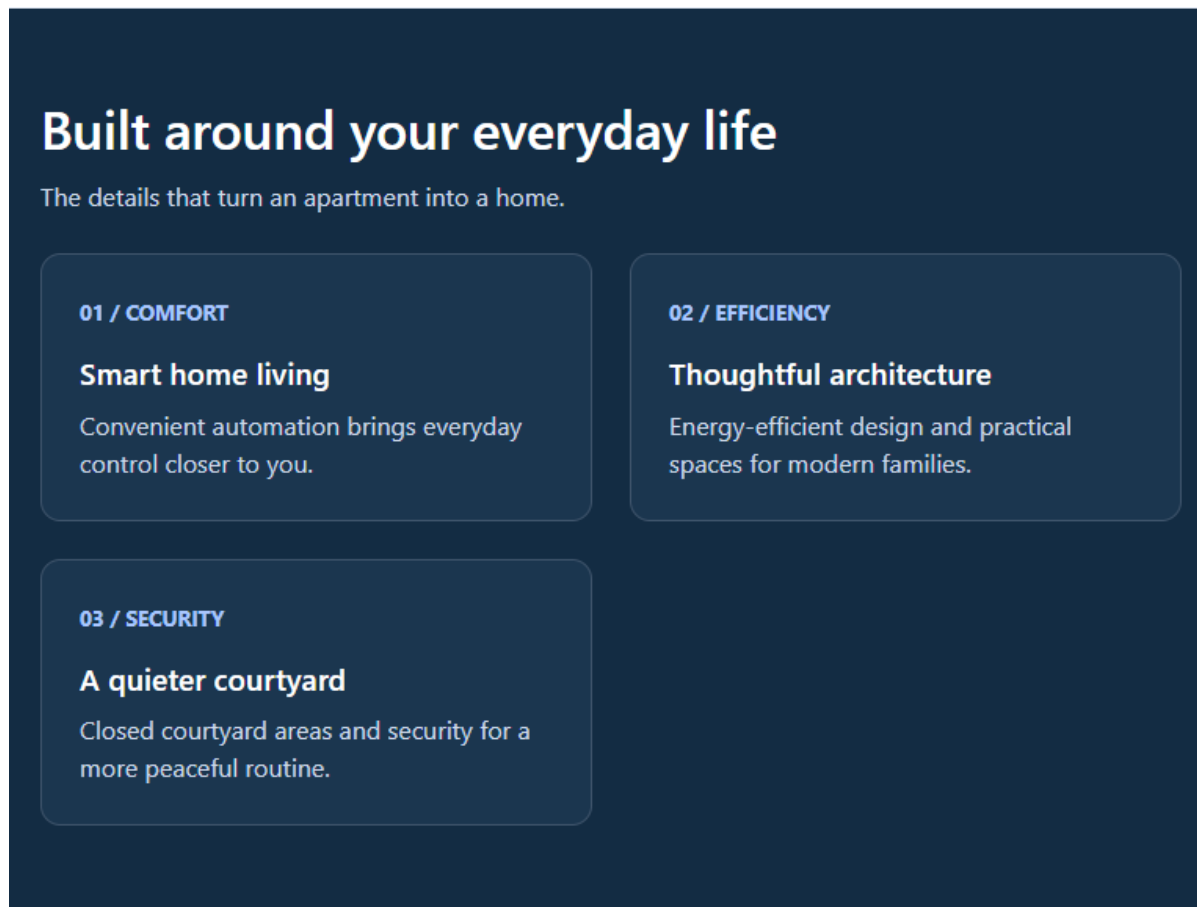

Task 1 Media queries by hand

The advantages section uses only custom classes. Its grid starts with one flexible column.

At min-width 768px it changes to two columns; at 992px it changes to three.

The tablet breakpoint also increases the heading size, section padding and grid gap.

No Bootstrap classes, fixed item widths or absolute positioning are used in this section.

Task 2 Bootstrap grid and components

Project cards use col-12 col-md-6 col-lg-4: one, two and three cards per row.

The hero uses two col-md-6 columns. Text is first on phones, while order-md utilities put the image first on wider screens. The two columns stack below 768px.

The navbar expands at lg and collapses into a working menu button below 992px.

The FAQ uses an accordion. d-none d-md-block and d-md-none switch the hero hints.

Spacing, alignment and card height use py-5, g-4, d-flex, h-100 and mt-auto.

Task 3 Comparison of the two approaches

Aspect	Custom media queries	Bootstrap grid
Layout code	The benefits grid needs a base rule and two explicit media queries.	The cards use col-12 col-md-6 col-lg-4 on each wrapper.
Design control	At 768px one rule changes the gap, heading size and section padding.	Grid widths follow Bootstrap breakpoints; custom CSS adds colour.
Speed of work	The grid rules are short, but every responsive change is written manually.	Navbar collapse and accordion behaviour come from the JS bundle.
Making changes	Changing benefits to four columns requires editing the desktop CSS rule.	Changing cards to four columns requires col-lg-3 on each wrapper.

Custom CSS suits sections where spacing and typography need to change together. Bootstrap suits repeated cards and familiar interactive components because its existing grid and JavaScript reduce the code needed. This page uses both for those reasons.

Verification and conclusion

375px: advantages 1 columns, cards 1 columns.

Document width equals viewport width: no horizontal scrolling.

Images, navbar and accordion passed; no JavaScript page errors.

768px: advantages 2 columns, cards 2 columns.

Document width equals viewport width: no horizontal scrolling.

Images, navbar and accordion passed; no JavaScript page errors.

1280px: advantages 3 columns, cards 3 columns.

Document width equals viewport width: no horizontal scrolling.

Images, navbar and accordion passed; no JavaScript page errors.

Chrome checks used official Bootstrap files served locally to the test browser.

The submitted HTML keeps the required CDN links and needs internet access.

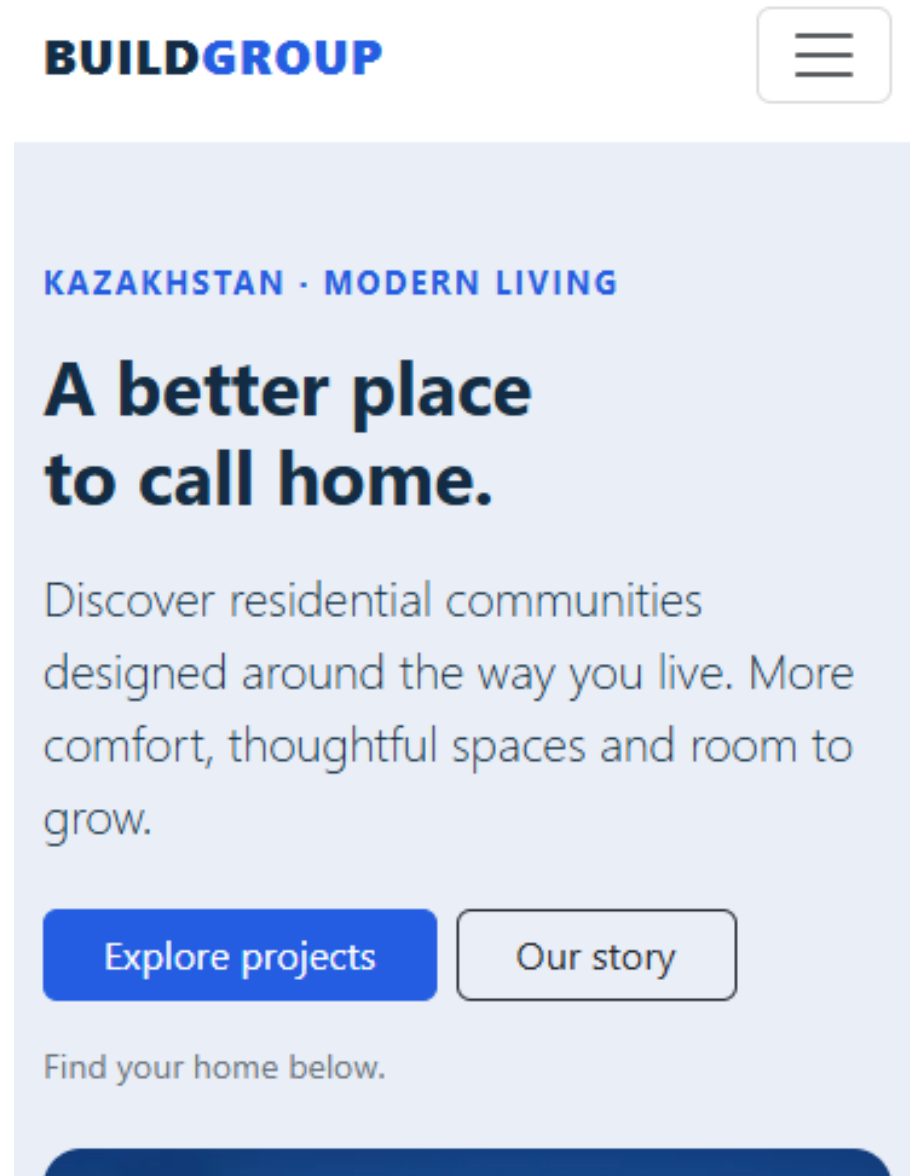

Both approaches start with one column and expand at wider breakpoints.

Custom CSS combines layout and design changes in one rule. Bootstrap simplifies standard grids and interactive components.

Full-page screenshots follow in consecutive slices with no content omitted.

Labels show the viewport width and vertical pixel range.
